Forecast For Yorkshire & the Humber
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 1600 on Thursday 28 Jan 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 1800 and 0600

Headline:
Rain overnight. Damp Friday, colder with some snow possible later.

This Evening and Tonight:
Rain soon spreading northeast, with some heavier bursts likely. This should largely die away for a time later in the night, leaving clearer skies and lighter winds, to give a risk of a slight frost and icy stretches in places. Minimum temperature 0 deg C (32 deg F).

Friday:
Perhaps fine at first, but soon becoming damp, with extensive low cloud. The onshore breeze should bring occasional light rain and drizzle, perhaps giving way to hill snow into nightfall. Maximum temperature 9 deg C (48 deg F).

Outlook for Saturday to Monday:
A bright but cold few days, with some sunny spells but also isolated wintry showers. Overnight frosts and freezing fog patches are likely as winds periodically fall light.
